Washington Post has found that marijuana use decreases crime rates in a state's population by nearly 30%. This is the first time that marijuana use has been shown to reduce crime rates. This is the first time that marijuana use has been shown to reduce crime rates. As I've commented on more than once before, this makes the case that we should legalize marijuana; particularly since this information is coming from states that have already legalized cannabis. Overall, crime rates are down in Colorado and Washington, and they are up in California and Nevada. Sure, I would still be careful using weed while driving since it can impair your driving (by making you drive slower, more carefully, or more distracted); however, marijuana was originally used to treat pain, and it is unlikely that weed would be as much of a liability to the public as alcohol if it was legalized. What are the limitations of this study? For starters, it's a correlation study. To be more scientific, the c6a93da74d
